【解答例】

When I turned sixteen, my parents gave me a smartphone for my birthday. Soon afterwards, my grades at school started getting worse. I couldn't concentrate on my classes, because I was always checking my text messages. I worried that if I kept my friends waiting for a reply, I would lose them.

One day, I left the phone on a train. Nobody handed it in. When my parents refused to buy me another one, I felt as if they had taken away my social life. I didn't talk to them for two weeks. Little by little, however, I came to understand that the loss of the phone was a blessing in disguise. Not only did my school work improve, but so did my relationships with my friends. Talking with each other directly made us closer. (135words)
