If I did voluntary work at university, I would like to join a group that planted trees. Like many young people, I worry about the effects of climate change. Human beings have caused this. We have cut down too many trees and our cars, factories and power plants have released too much carbon dioxide into the atmosphere. By planting trees in both rural and urban areas, I could make a concrete contribution to solving this problem. This is because trees absorb carbon dioxide from the air and reduce land surface temperatures.
